The uber talented Malek, gracious and eloquent, posed for pictures and brief interviews before taking the stage with The Hollywood Reporterâ??s Scott Feinberg at the historic Arlington Theatre in Santa Barbara, California, last night, February 1st.

In what might have been Feinbergâ??s best tribute conversation, The Hollywood Reporter Awards Columnist, showed his knowledge of Malekâ??s work and personal life while gently nudging Malek. Slowly, Malek began to open up and the enthusiastic crowd warmed up with more than one female voice calling out their love for the honoree.

Malek continued his steady composure sharing his experience in his auditions and with his directors with humor and a steadfast commitment to his craft. After watching several clips and the audience hanging on every Malek word, Feinberg addressed â??the elephant in the room,â?• which turned out to be the firing of Bryan Singer as Director of Bohemian Rhapsody.

Out of his respect and admiration for Freddie Mercury and the band, Queen, Malek preferred to keep the attention and focus on them.

Malek accepted the award presented by friend and actor Joseph Mazzello. Malek seemed a little pensive afterwards as he thanked the audience and exited stage right with Mazzello. Seems as though we havenâ??t heard the last from Rami Malekâ?¦.
