

Description

Posted by Larry Gleeson

By Mike Scott, NOLA.com

Mudbound, the New Orleans-shot race drama that debuted this month at the Sundance Film Festival to sweeping acclaim, has been picked up by Netflix. The online streaming service paid $12.5 million for distribution rights to director Dee Rees's film, the biggest deal to come out of this year's fest, according to Variety and other industry publications.

With Mudbound being hailed as an instant contender for next year's Oscars, Netflix will reportedly release the film simultaneously online and in theaters, following it with an award-season campaign. It is unclear how soon Netflix plans to release the film.

Garrett Hedlund, left, and Jason Mitchell star in director Dee Rees' New Orleans-shot drama 'Mudbound.' (Steve Dietl/Sundance Institute via AP)

Based on Hillary Jordan's 2008 novel of the same name, "Mudbound" tracks the complicated relationship between two families — one white, the other black — living in rural Mississippi just after World War II. Carey Mulligan plays a refined Memphis woman who relocates with her new husband (Jason Clarke) and their two young daughters to the Delta. Rob Morgan and Mary J. Blige play the heads of a black family that farms cotton on a leased part of Mulligan and Clarke's land.

Also starring are Garret Hedlund and New Orleans native Jason Mitchell.

(Source: nola.com)

Category

1. distribution
2. Sundance Film Festival

Tags

1. Art
2. censorship
3. Cinema
4. Conversation
5. creativity
6. entertainment
7. Film
8. Filmmaking
9. inspiration
10. Larry Gleeson
11. marketing
12. Media
13. Netflix

- 14. News
- 15. platform
- 16. Programming
- 17. Society
- 18. writing

Date Created

February 2, 2017

Author

hollywoodglee