This little-indie-that-could, which is a rare female coming-of-age/romantic comedy hybrid that actually isnâ??t focused on the actual romance. Itâ??s deeply silly, and (at least for me) wonderful in that the â??successâ?• of the young womanâ??s journey isnâ??t predicated on a wedding bells wrap up. And I know you know what I mean.

The film killed it at Dances With Films, and is now going to do a week run at Cinelounge (July 15-21) in Los Angeles before streaming everywhere.

Roseâ??s feature film directorial debut, Goodbye, Petrushka focuses on Claire (Lizzie Kehoe), a romantic, a puppeteer, and a fish out of water at college. Following a chance meeting with Thibault, a French figure skater at the end of his career, and at the behest of her crazy, rich best friend, Claire leaves school and moves from New York to Paris. Once there, she meets Thibault again and they embark on a unique project together with her puppets. However, her new life is constantly thwarted by obstinate French bureaucrats, her job as a nanny for a horrible Parisian family, and a frustratingly toxic relationship she has also managed to land herself. Claireâ??s Paris is less a personal renaissance and more a relentless series of faux pas. In the end, she will have to figure out that to find happiness, she will need to put herself first and listen to her own unique, silly, and beautiful heart.

Rose said, â??Goodbye, Petrushka is a story about a young womanâ??s growing-up experience in all its weird, messy glory. I have always wished there were more stories about young people, especially young women, making mistakes â?? sometimes huge, embarrassing, goofy mistakes â?? yet coming out stronger and smarter at the other end. We are thrilled that Indie Rights is inspired by the story and decided to champion it. We were independent in every sense of the word â?? not just in terms of our production, but also when it came to the story we wanted to tell.â?•

â??We are thrilled to be able to represent Goodbye, Petrushka,â?• said Linda Nelson, co-Founder of Indie Rights. â??A film from a young womanâ??s point of view that is funny, heart-felt, romantic, set in New York and Paris, and includes animation and puppets â?? what more could one ask for? Like the filmâ??s main character, we see big things for this film and look forward to introducing it to a world-wide audience.â?•
