

FILM CAPSULE: Singin' In The Rain (Donen, Kelly, 1952): USA

Description

Viewed during the Santa Barbara International Film Festival. Reviewed by Larry Gleeson.

Singin' In The Rain, is a Hollywood gem created under auspicious beginnings as the writers, Green and Cadden, pushed themselves through the night to come up with a musical recycling some of the best of the silent era. What a wonder!

The musical film contains toe-tapping tunes and choreographed dancing that are a pleasure to experience. The version I watched was in color and the colors were vivid and bright and complemented the tone of the film.

In addition, the musical had a significant industry milestone contained within as the transition from silent to talkies was showcased in a lighthearted, laughable, and fun manner as we see a camera hidden in a phone booth, a microphone placed in flower pot and the outcomes of such attempts as preview audiences laugh and guffaw at the attempts to synchronize and balance the recorded voices.

audience witnesses platinum blonde bombshell, Lina Lamont, played to a tee by Jean

Hagen, a prim a-donna of the worst sort, who has connived, bullied and blackmailed co-stars and executives alike in making her way to the top, being brought down as the curtain is raised showcasing a new rising star, Kathy, played by the effervescent Debbie Reynolds. The audience sees Kathy singing and Lamont's contemptuous attempt at lip synching. When confronted Lamont speaks and the audience roars with laughter at her high-pitched Brooklyn accent.

The theme of contempt isn't just introduced at the end. It's evident from the opening as Don, played by Gene Kelly, overwhelms a reporter as he details his rise to stardom with his partner Cosmo, played by Donald O'Connor, with "Dignity. Always Dignity." Yet, the truth is the two struggled and scraped and clawed their way to the top working in pool halls, slapstick vaudeville sketches and even burlesque. Not one to be left out, Kathy gets in on the contempt as she tells Don she's a serious actor and then we see her jumping out of a birthday cake.

Meanwhile the studio is sending out press releases stating Don and Lina are a romantic couple. Hilarity ensues as Lina believes the press releases and is in hot pursuit of her man Don. And, studio executive Simpson, played by Millard Mitchell insists talkies will never catch on. Most everything gets turned this side of Tuesday as Don and Kathy become romantically involved, Lina finally gets what's coming to her (although one can't help but sympathize with such a nitwit), talkies catch on and sound get synchronized onto the film as it's shot, and the project is a success.

Definitely a feel-good film from start to finish. I highly recommend this film to any cinephile as it's a Hollywood treasure in respect to the industry at large and also because of the superb dancing and singing performances. Furthermore, I strongly encourage those interested viewers to watch this film on the big screen as its characters are larger than life.

Category

1. Feature Film
2. Santa Barbara International Film Festival

Tags

1. Art
2. Cinema
3. creativity
4. Film
5. Film Festival
6. Filmmaking
7. Hollywood
8. inspiration
9. Larry Gleeson
10. marketing
11. Music
12. musical
13. News
14. photography
15. Programming
16. Santa Barbara International Film Festival
17. Singin' In The Rain
18. Technology
19. Women
20. Writer

Date Created

November 15, 2016

Author

hollywoodglee