Terry Gilliamâ??s â??The Man Who Killed Don Quixoteâ?? Delayed Again

Description

Posted by Larry Gleeson

By Jack Giroux

Terry Gilliamâ??s longtime passion project The Man Who Killed Don Quixote has been delayed again. The writer-director was going to start shooting the film (for the second time) next week, but another unexpected curveball has been thrown in this troubled projectâ??s direction. Gilliam called the most recent delay of his fantastical adaptation of Miguel de Cervantesâ?? novel â??slight.â?•

Whatâ??s preventing Don Quixote from going before cameras this time? Money.

While speaking with Jonathan Ross on the BBC Radio 2 talk show (via Indiewire), Gilliam explained the delay:

> â??I was supposed to start to be shooting it starting next Monday. Itâ??s been slightly delayed. I had this producer, a Portuguese chap, who claimed heâ??d get all the money together in time. And a few weeks ago, he proved that he didnâ??t have the money. So we are still marching forward. It is not dead. I will be dead before the film is.â?•

Back in March, it was reported Gilliam would begin principal photography on October 4th. The film, which will star Adam Driver and Michael Palinâ?? (Monty Python), was said to have an $18 million budget. The Man Who Killed Don Quixote started to appear genuinely close to happening, but that still sounds like the case, despite the new delay. As Gilliam said, theyâ??re marching forward.

A few months ago, the directorâ??s plan was to have the film finished in time for next yearâ??s Cannes Film Festival. He told reporters at this yearâ??s fest heâ??s ready to get this movie out of his head and into the world (Source: Indiewire):

> â??We should be here in Cannes next year with the finished film, and then you can ask me why I made such a mess of it or why I made such a wonderful film. I think itâ??s going to be greatâ?¦Itâ??s one of those dream nightmares that never leave you until you finish the thing. I want to get this film out of my life so that I can get on with the rest of my life.â?•

If this recent delay is only momentary, Gilliam can probably still reach that 2017 Cannes premiere he wants. The last we saw of the filmmaker he was scouting locations for The Man Who Killed Don Quixote, which is set to co-star Olga Kurylenko, Stellan SkarsgÃ¥rd, and Joana Ribeiro. After 20 years of waiting, Terry Gilliam will, sadly, just have to wait a little bit longer complete The Man Who Killed Don Quixote.

(Source: http://www.slashfilm.com)

Category

1. Cannes
2. Feature Film

Tags

1. Actor
2. Adam Driver
3. BBC Radio
4. Cannes Film Festival
5. Director
6. Film
7. Film Festival
8. Filmmaking
9. Joana Ribeiro
10. Jonathan Ross
11. Michael Palin
12. Miguel de Cervantes
13. Monty Python
14. Olga Kurylenko
15. Producer
16. Stellan Skarsgard
17. Terry Gilliam
18. The Man Who Killed Don Quixote

Date Created
October 3, 2016
Author
hollywoodglee